

in today's market

Life, the universe, and Windows -

most likely users' errors

- Home
- About
- RSS

- Becoming successful at job interviews has become harder than ever. The main reason is not only because of the nature of the interview but also because of its changes. Besides the fact that America is in a major economic slow down, you need to consider many factors. Interviews nowadays are, planned, drafted

Questions your interviewer may not want to hear

and evaluated on a pre-defined

filed in Job, interview on Sep.24, 2008

It is trivial to say what to ask at an interview. Simply because interview nowadays isn't a matter of efforts anymore, it's a matter of science. Today company hires computer science <sup>professionals</sup> who has PhD in psychology to <sup>create</sup> questions and answers so that hiring managers can quickly and "accurately" pick out the "right" candidate. This means most and probably every question you ask will be evaluated on some kind of scientific method depend on the company. Therefore just to be safe on the playing field, ~~please~~ avoid asking the most obvious but also most controversial questions below whenever you are engaged in an interview:

pre-defined scientific metrics Companies in today market here

change the word metrics

1) How many days off <sup>will</sup> do I have? <sup>at</sup>?

This may sound like a valid question since it's related to the benefit section. However, your hiring manager may think you like to stay home <sup>more than 4 days a week</sup>. Especially when interview for busy call center job such as Technical Support Rep or Phone Support, that requires 24/7 availability of all its operation, this question will really push you off the cliff.

2) How much do I get paid?

The validity of this question will appear bolder when you propose the question later on in the interview. Imagine asking this question right at the beginning of the conversation, you will appear no more than a blood sucking money will do anything for money corporate white-collar.

** More questions coming up tomorrow -

Tags: interview, Job

Leave a Reply

Logged in as squirrelonfire. Logout »